

Sample Answer – About 1 minute

Both jobs can be demanding, although for quite different reasons. Working in a busy kitchen can be particularly challenging because chefs often have to work under pressure and deal with several tasks at once. They need to prepare food quickly while maintaining high standards, especially during busy periods. The working environment can also be stressful due to the heat, noise and long working hours.

Construction work involves a different set of challenges. Workers may have to cope with difficult weather conditions and carry out physically demanding tasks for long periods of time. There is also a greater risk of injury, so they need to remain alert and follow safety procedures carefully. Overall, both situations require people to stay focused even when they are under pressure.

Partner's Question

Which situation would you find more stressful?

I'd find working on a construction site more stressful because of the physical demands and the potential safety risks. Although working in a kitchen can be hectic, I'd probably find it easier to cope with than working outdoors in difficult conditions.

Useful Vocabulary in Context

work under pressure

Doctors often have to work under pressure and make important decisions quickly.

deal with several tasks at once

Teachers regularly have to deal with several tasks at once during a busy school day.

maintain high standards

A successful company needs to maintain high standards even when demand increases.

physically demanding

Working on a farm can be physically demanding, particularly during the summer months.

remain alert

Drivers need to remain alert when travelling long distances.

safety procedures

Employees should always follow safety procedures when using heavy machinery.

potential safety risks

Employers should identify potential safety risks before asking staff to use new equipment.

hectic

Life can become quite hectic when you are trying to balance work, family and other responsibilities.