

Sample Answer – About 1 minute

These two ways of shopping have different advantages. Shopping in a physical store gives customers the chance to see products up close and check their quality before making a purchase. When buying clothes, for instance, they can try things on and make sure they fit properly. Another benefit is that customers can get advice from shop assistants and take their purchases home straight away.

Online shopping, on the other hand, is particularly convenient because people can shop from the comfort of their own home and have everything delivered to their door. It also makes it easier to compare prices and choose from a wider range of products. For people with a busy schedule, being able to shop at any time can be a major advantage.

Partner's Question

Which way of shopping would you prefer?

I'd probably prefer shopping in a physical store when buying clothes because being able to try things on makes it easier to make the right choice. However, for everyday products, I'd go for online shopping because it saves time and effort.

Useful Vocabulary in Context

see something up close

Visiting a museum allows you to see famous works of art up close.

make a purchase

Many customers read online reviews before making a purchase.

try something on

It's always a good idea to try shoes on before buying them.

straight away

Buying from a local shop means you can take the product home straight away.

from the comfort of your own home

Online courses allow people to learn new skills from the comfort of their own home.

delivered to your door

Many supermarkets now allow customers to have their groceries delivered to their door.

a wider range of Large bookshops usually offer a wider range of titles than smaller ones.

save time and effort

Planning your journey in advance can save you a lot of time and effort.